Home Away: Celebrating Syrian heritage in Manchester

The aim of this preliminary research is to explore how the Syrian community in Manchester views and uses its cultural heritage. With this project we aim to explore in what ways heritage is important and how it is used. We would like to better understand the value of heritage for communities that have been displaced and how it is used to recreate a sense of home, to pass on or share stories and traditions, or to create common grounds.

The collected data will be used to understand the role of heritage for communities and might be used in academic publications on the topic. The information will be shared with the organisers of Celebrating Syria in order to help them develop future programmes. Any resulting publications will be made available to you through them.
